A and dirty red bandanna handkerwas tied so tightly about the state that it sank into the flesh. The distriction of the handkerchief were knotted gether under the chin and the force employed to tie the knot had been so great that a part of the handkerchief had been torn away, the scrap lying on the floor by the bedside.

A peculiar feature was that the attitude of the body was one of complete repose and there was no sign of disorder about the room. But for her swollen and distorted face it might have been mought she was sleeping. She was lying upon her back, with one hand at her side and the other thrown back above her head.

There was every evidence that she had been visited by a unit and then drugged or made drunk before the murder. This would also account for the absence of indications of a struggle.

The testimony of people occupying other rooms in the tenement indicates that these two girls lived a queerly mixed life. They had been there but three weeks, but had attracted general attention in the house. Their queries that the poor; they had no fine clothing, and they certainly did some laundry work both at home and outside.

It was later discovered that the girls were advertising for gentlemen's washing in the German and English newspapers. The name of Lang was signed to these advertisements.

Mrs. Anna Boes, an elderly woman who lives directly across the hall from Mrs. Lang's rooms, has very positive notions of the character of the girls, and with her little niece is able to furnish the only hint of a clue to the murderer so far obtainable.

Mrs. Boes says that at about $30 o'clock yesterday morning she heard a man knock at the opposite door. He was admitted. Minnie was then at home alone.

admitted. Minnie was then at home alone.

A half hour later she heard the door open and heavy footfalls along the hall and on the stairway. Her little niece, who was in the hall, saw at that time a man of medium height and build, plainly but decently dressed, come from the room and go down stairs. She did not see his face, but plainly heard him laugh as he passed down. Not a soul was heard to stir in or near that room after that time until Miss Kohler rushed out with the alarm.

He was seized by the policemen at once, but he gave a name and address and stated the nature of his business with such directness that he was released.

The police refuse to give any information about this man, saying that they are looking him up.

At 2 o'clock this morning a stout, fashionably dressed man, wearing goldbowed spectacles, called and asked for Mrs. Lang. He met the janitress, who told him of the murder, and he left in a hurry. It seems that this man had been seen about the house at various times since the girls have lived there.

Miss Kohler was asked by an "Evening World" reporter about her advertisements in the newspapers and her alleged callers. She said that she had advertised for washing and obtained some in that way, but had had no callers and she did not know that Minnie had. She said that Minnie rented and pald for the rooms and was the one known as Mrs. Lang, although the neighbors do not understand it so.

WANTS HIS FORMER OFFICE.

Peter J. Lynon Appeals to Court for Reinstatement.

Peter J. Lynon this morning petitioned Justice Gaynor, in the Supreme Court, Brooklyn, for a writ of mandamus, compelling the Board of Super-visors to reinstate him as assistant keeper of the Hall of Records on the ground that he was a veteran fireman and had been removed without a trial. Normen S. Dike, who appeared for John Anderson, the present incumbent, opposed Lynon's application on the ground that he had been appointed for a specified term, which nullified the Vet-
